What has the war to do with if? The issue of the war was not emancipation, or negro suffrage, or a high tariff, or reconstruction. Kone of the questions which now divide the two parties in the country was before the tribunal of arms to which the two sections of the Union had appealed. The only point was the independent existence of the South. That having been negatived by the trial of battle, and the restoration of the original order of things having been achieved, new controversies arose. These interests the whole pople. They relate to conditions of peace, not to a by-gone state of war. They are current, not antecedent in their nature and application, and they ought to be decided fairly by all the people of all the States according to the common interest rationally considered and not subjected to passions and prejudices which are obsolete in everything except their power to stir up everything except their power to stir up our worse and to confuse our better sensi-bilities.

The policy of the Republicans is based upon the passions of the war. All that they do takes this origin. The war is at once their Inspiration and their pretext. once their inspiration and their pretext. Leave it out and nothing remains of their statesmanship, their civil economy, and particularly their oratory. Reduce the political situation to a plain and matter-of-fact discussion of facts and measures on their merits, and the Republican fabric, puffed up with prejudices and dec-orated with filmsy designs, would collapse at once.

General Grant is a notoriously incapable person. No one will pretend that he is a statesman. If he is not corrupt he is at least indecently obtuse to appearances, a carcless, parsimonious man, who regards the public service as a private speculation in whach he and his tamily are engaged. If he does not meditate a life tenuire in the Executive office it is because he is more avariations than ambitious and a greater fool than his enemies have taken him to be. All that he has done looks to the permanent retention of the place he him to be. All that he has done looks to the permanent retention of the place he holds, and he has given the country no reason to believe that he is incapable of the worst acts of which men in power have been guilty. We do not hate General Grant. That is not the feeling. We dread him; we regard him as a dangerous man, and this sentiment refers to the future not to the nest.

In the northern portion of the State characterish and truits of the Northwest grow in luxuriance. The same lands that produce from twenty to thirty bushels of wheat to the acre and from forty to fifty bushels of corn, yield a hale of cotton to the acre. On the 82d parallel of hutude, and for fifty miles on either side of it, wheat, corn, oats, rice and cotton may be seen growing side by side. What makes the wheat crop more ratuable is, that it is harvested a month earlier than in the Northwestern States. Owing to the mildaces of the climate, stock requires but little attention in winter.

The great number of ainds presented to the oublic by the originalors of new varieties is a puzzle, and we view the matter as one that we cannot fairly determine, if deatrous of planting a vineyard. Can we take the Conbord alone, or shall we have Delawares, Hartfurd Prolific, ives' Seedling, Norion's Virginia or what other of the many kinds which have each their advocated? There have receasily come to our notice two new grapes, which seem to attract universal praise; the Croton and Sessequab, both the products of the Croton and Sessequab, both the products of cacquainted with, vir. is. W. Underfall, of (roton Point, New York. The Croton was grown from Delaware seed, crossed with the Chusoliss de Proint, hield, which was planted in the spring of 1804 and bore lis first fruit in 1805. It is a free grower, with farm, strong-jointed wood, which ripens early in the season. The bunch is very larve, sight or nine inches long, with beary shoulder, the Derry of medium size, of a light yellowish, grean color; quality said to be good, ripening before the Cencord. This grape presents seems very desighed qualitates to grape-growers, and they should make a fair trial of it. The Susaegua was grown from seed of the Concord, oreside with Biack Prince, and is a very promitting vertey. We want all 1 adjointments, it y all get head has that which is best.
